

Progress update: 20th March 2024

We remain committed to providing you with regular updates on the engineering works at Pilsworth South Landfill.

The drilling of permanent gas extraction wells was completed yesterday (19th March 24) despite the challenges of ground condition and the continued rain. These full depth gas collection wells have now been connected to the existing site infrastructure and are continuously extracting landfill gas from the newly temporarily capped area. These wells are being balanced into the gas collection infrastructure.

The lining work has continued when the weather has allowed, with only a small area of capping material remaining to be laid and sealed. It is expected there will also be some remedial patch up work and snagging to come in the coming week.

The remaining lining work and the snagging work can only be done in the dry weather as it involves welding plastic to plastic. This means unfortunately there has been limited further deployment today (20th March 24), despite the teams being in place.

As mentioned in an earlier update, whilst we carry out these works, there may be potential for temporary localised odour. Unfortunately, this is unavoidable as we complete this project that will provide the long term and sustainable solution for the site.

We can assure you that we are working hard and dynamically around the challenges of the weather, to progress different aspects of the site engineering with significant resource to complete these works.

As previously stated, the site will remain closed to waste inputs until this work is completed, however we will continue to accept restoration material used to cover and stabilise the capping material.

We do apologise for any odour issues during the works, we remain focussed on completing these engineering works and resolving any odour issues.
